

The design for Wulaba Park amplifies rather than conceals its role as a detention basin, to create distinctive and memorable park spaces. The landform is designed to create a high point or "island" in the northern end of the park connected to Archibald Avenue and associated square by a bridge.

A series of gardens spaces are proposed in the park, providing a variety of spaces with seasonal variety and colour. The park is designed to offer apartment dwellers access to a garden experience that is unavailable in their own private open space.

An integrated play structure incorporates multiple play experiences. This is designed to enhance imaginative, and narrative based play and includes custom and off the shelf elements. Elements include a three storey tower and giant slide. Ropes and cable climbing apparatus, slide, swings and tunnels complete this exciting play experience.

The design integrates public art by Nuha Saad into key elements in the park including colour patterning to the tower balustrades and pergola canopy.
